Stop the U.S. War on the World!

New York City, March 5, 2003.

It is May First—International Workers Day. It is the day when workers and oppressed people all over the world raise our sights and renew a common revolutionary vision. And rarely in modern times has this been more needed and urgent.

From the crooked alleyways of a Middle East under attack, to rivers of protest flowing through cities like New York, London, and Rome, to the Maoist people's wars, base areas, and guerrilla zones of Nepal, Peru, and the Philippines—there is a deepening sense that we are all in the opening days of great conflicts.

As the Committee of the Revolutionary Internationalist Movement says: "History has to be made by the proletariat and the people."

The U.S. imperialists have declared that this is their century and their world. But we need to prove them wrong.

The future is ours! We only want the world!
